this is) and that specimens of 10 years or more with 6" or so trunk diameter at base will withstand about anything, or at least come back. On the other hand, an apparently established plant will occassionally poop out for no apparent reason.

In connection with the above I'm talking basically of the old time varieties, which unfortunately are about all we normally see. Brilliant, Agnes Gault, Kona for the most part exceed any others. One does see a fair number of Crown of Bohemia, White Wint, Floribunda, California Gold, Jigora, Eleanor Gartley, and I have seen some of these as far north as the San Francisco Bay area, our last three winters have been fairly mild. More unfrequently we see Sea Shell, Mrs. Wilder, Juna, Kauai, Texas Star, Kate Sessions, Kala Kaua, still less frequently Bride, Santa Paula, Mrs. Lowery, Coronado, American Beauty. Other than these, I occasionally come across an isolated instance of one of the older ones, but that is just about it generally except that Monrovia Nursery, our largest local wholesaler, put Ross Estey on the market about three years ago and it is now beginning to show up here and there.
